

On Thursday, August 19, eight FOSM volunteers took a quick jaunt to Cold Canyon to put the finishing touches on the Un Poquito reroutes. Tasks included stump removal; widening some sections of tread; and taking care of several small trees on the uphill side of the trail, flagged earlier in the week by Bob Galloway as good candidates for digging out or low-stumping. The crew finished the short 3-hour day by closing off the final section of bypassed trail, thus completing the project in Cold Canyon.

The volunteers were Jenny Blackmore, Don Carnicom, Phil Cromer, Bruce Hansche, Jeff Huser, Mike and Pat Madden, and Eric Russell. Phil worked at the “upper” reroute for most of the time, far from the camera. 😊

This stump could snag an equestrian or biker.

Speaking of bikers, let's make it a little wider around this corner.

The old trail is visible in the drainage below. Pulling debris onto it helps close it off.
